Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: .describes a case in which a man complained of earache. The pain was in the lower part of the ear--not in the canal. This part of the ear is supplied by a branch of the second cervical nerve, and an enlarged gland was found pressing on this nerve. Treatment was applied to the gland causing it to suppurate, relieving the pressure on the nerve and the earache ceased. Here is another case: Suppose a case of pain in the head. It is very important to know whether the pain is in the front of the head or in the back. If in front, the fifth nerve is affected, and the trouble is somewhere in the area of the distribution of that nerve. If it is in the back of the head, the occipital is affected, and the disease is located at the origin of that nerve between the first and second cervical vertebra. Hilton remarks further: One of the most frequent of these reflex pains is that which occurs between the shoulders or over the inferior angles of the scapulae. This pain must be connected with the distribution of some of the spinal nerves, because no other structures could express the pain, and no nerves occupy that position except the 4th, 5th, 6th, dorsal nerves. Hence we must conclude that these nerves are the immediate seat of the pain. If we trace internally the great splanchnic nerve from within the thorax downwards to the solar...
